Section 1: comments on the assessment

Question paper: Reading and Translation

The topic of the reading and translation paper was on smart devices in homes and the potential risks they present. Most candidates engaged well with the topic.

Most candidates attempted most or all questions in the paper.

Question paper: Listening and Discursive Writing

The listening paper was on the context of employability and focused on young people in the world of work and working abroad. Candidates engaged well with the topic, and most were able to attempt all questions.

All four essay titles were attempted.

Portfolio

The portfolio performed as intended.

There were no language in work portfolios submitted this year.

Performance–talking

The performance–talking performed as intended.

Section 2: comments on candidate performance

Areas that candidates performed well in

Question paper: Reading and Translation

Most candidates performed well in this paper, especially in the comprehension questions 1 to 7, where they gave enough detail to gain the marks.

Most candidates successfully answered questions 1(a), 2, 4(b), 5 and 7.

For question 8, the overall purpose question, most candidates were able to identify the writer's overall purpose. Many candidates used appropriate inferencing skills to justify their answer. Candidates who gained higher marks had a deeper understanding of the text as a whole and approached the question in an analytical and critical way. The stronger answers stated the overall purpose and then went on to analyse the stylistic techniques used and could outline the ways in which these substantiate their argument and the impact they made on the reader. References to the text were linked to their answer and not simply translated from the Spanish. Candidates who referred to the input from experts were able to identify the ways in which this strengthened the writer's overall purpose. Strong responses to this question were well-structured and clearly related their answer to the text with evidence, analysis and inference.

The translation was done well by many candidates. In stronger responses, candidates accurately translated verb tenses and verb forms. Sense units 4, 5, 6, 8 and 9 were particularly well done.

Question paper: Listening and Discursive Writing

In the listening section, most candidates coped well with item 1 and item 2.

In the discursive writing section, essays that were awarded the higher pegged marks had a good sense of structure, an introduction and a conclusion that were relevant to the essay title, and were written in paragraphs. Candidates achieved good marks when they were able to adapt learned material into their answer, their essays were relevant to the question, and they presented comprehensive arguments using accurate language that was appropriate to the level, including idiomatic expressions.

Candidates achieved the highest marks when they fully addressed the titles in an objective way using interesting ideas. Candidates perform well when they incorporate discursive elements including opinion and argument into their essays.

Portfolio

Most portfolio submissions were good. Many candidates engaged with their chosen texts and demonstrated a good level of analysis. There was a good variety of texts and some new pieces of literature. The strongest essays had a concise question that allowed candidates to adopt an analytical approach or had a title that allowed candidates to develop two sides of an argument.

Essays that worked well:

- had a title that allowed the analysis to be focused
- focused on specific themes or linguistic features, for example imagery or symbolism that examine cinematographic techniques in a film
- when candidates chose to write about poetry or short stories. These portfolios tended to use more analysis and evaluation, and the quotations were more relevant
- had a clear sense of structure, with one idea being discussed in each paragraph and where these ideas were linked back to the title
- where the introduction is succinct and does not give the conclusion away at the beginning

- were written in an appropriate formal register avoiding personal opinions and referring to their chosen text and appropriate, additional sources, with relevant evidence and quotations
- had reliable bibliographies containing three or more references, with at least two sources in Spanish. This is good practice.

Very few candidates exceeded the word limit.

Performance–talking

Most candidates performed very well, were well prepared, confident and spoke about engaging topics on which they could speak at length. Most candidates spoke well about their chosen text for their portfolio.

Most candidates were able to go beyond minimal responses and had interesting and mature opinions on their chosen topics. Candidates performed well when they incorporated learned material and responded well to unexpected questions.

Performances that were awarded the higher pegged marks demonstrated high level of accuracy, complex and sophisticated language and the ability to offer mature and well-developed opinions.

Successful candidates were enthusiastic and very well prepared, with good pronunciation and intonation.

Most candidates used mature discussion techniques, complex and sophisticated language including idiomatic expressions. Candidates were at ease with the method of assessment.

Areas that candidates found demanding

Question paper: Reading and Translation

In the comprehension questions, dictionary misuse, poor expression in English and insufficient detail caused candidates to miss out on marks.

Question 3 was challenging for candidates, and many made the mistake of writing '10' instead of '100'.

In question 4, many candidates did not give enough detail to gain the marks. Many candidates had difficulty with the following vocabulary: vigilancias dirigidas, huella digital, sujeto a, puntuales, la renta.

In the overall purpose question (8), while most candidates could identify the overall purpose of the text, some did not manage to write a reflective response and could not use analytical or inferential language to develop their answer fully. Many candidates repeated comprehension answers or quoted from the text, rather than analysing the language used or the writer's techniques. Many candidates can identify the techniques used and the stylistic features contained in the text but do not go on to explore these techniques or examine the impact they have on the overall purpose. Answers that lacked structure were awarded the lower pegged marks.

In the translation question (9), candidates who performed less well missed out words, did not use the correct verb tenses or verb forms and did not proofread their response to ensure that the whole translation made sense. Candidates mistranslated eso and tanto...como.

Question paper: Listening and Discursive Writing

Some candidates used prepared material that was not fully relevant to the essay titles, and some ran out of ideas and did not fully address the topic. Candidates who relied on prepared material tended to produce less accurate language when attempting to express ideas beyond what they have memorised.

Candidates who wrote a personalised response to the essay titles did not gain the higher pegged marks.

Some candidates continue to make errors with basic language and grammar: adjectival agreements, inappropriate use of infinitives, the inability to conjugate verbs or manipulate tenses, unidiomatic translation from English into Spanish, the incorrect use of ser and estar, para and por, and missed opportunities in using the subjunctive when appropriate.

Essays that are repetitive or that do not fully address the question, and over half of the essay is irrelevant, rarely achieve high marks.

Portfolio

Many candidates did not select a title or essay question that generates critical analysis. Essay titles that are overly complex or are too vague do not elicit an effective response from candidates.

Essays that attempt to link two unrelated pieces of literature often do not lend themselves to a clear focus. This can lead to weak links between sources and forced analysis of the two sources.

Inappropriate register had a negative effect on some essays, and candidates should avoid the use of exaggeration.

Many candidates repeated one or two ideas throughout their essays and struggled to provide a deep analysis of the text.

Some candidates provided lengthy elaborations from one small point or short quotation, leading to superficial analysis.

Poor expression in English and a lack of proofreading was a feature of some essays. This leads to errors in syntax, poor punctuation and spelling errors.

Essays often lack critical terminology with candidates retelling the story and not addressing their title through evaluation of themes or literary techniques.

A few essays linked texts that had no thematic link, for example from different authors or set in different time periods. In some essays, candidates made unsubstantiated assertions with no reference to the area of study.

Some candidates wrote their conclusion in the opening paragraph and then tried to justify this throughout the rest of the essay.

A few candidates did not refer to at least two sources in Spanish in their bibliography and were penalised for this.

Performance–talking

Most candidates engage well with the performance–talking. However, some have difficulty in manipulating and adapting learned material to cope with questions they are asked and find it difficult to sustain the discussion.

A few candidates had difficulty with accuracy in verbs and verb endings, tenses, the gender of nouns, appropriate use of the infinitive and adjectival agreement.

Candidates who had chosen to discuss, for example, future plans, a gap year or the importance of learning languages found it challenging to incorporate the use of complex and sophisticated language into the conversation, to offer mature and sophisticated opinions or to sustain the discussion at the level required.

Section 3: preparing candidates for future assessment

Teachers and lecturers should ensure candidates:

- refer to all criteria, detailed marking instructions, pegged marks and performance descriptors
- have opportunities to use Understanding Standards materials
- make full use of the Advanced Higher Modern Languages web page, including course reports, marking instructions for Advanced Higher Spanish, and past papers
- are aware their handwriting must be legible

Question paper: Reading and Translation

Teachers and lecturers should ensure candidates:

- have opportunities to practise working within the time constraints for the paper
- allocate an appropriate amount of time to the comprehension questions, the overall purpose question, and the translation
- provide detailed answers to the comprehension questions and look out for qualifiers, comparatives and superlatives
- check the number of marks being awarded for each question, to guide them towards the amount of information they have to provide
- pay particular attention to their expression in English
- explore all meanings of the word they are looking up when using a dictionary, to ensure they choose the one which best fits the context of their answer

Question 8: overall purpose question

Teachers and lecturers should ensure candidates:

- draw inferences from the text and not merely provide factual information or repeat the answers to their comprehension questions. Candidates should know that they must examine the impact of the writer's techniques and word choice and not simply state what they are
- provide responses that are well-structured and have a conclusion
- are aware any quotation from the text should be appropriate, relevant and explained, not simply translated from the Spanish
- are aware a succinct answer using inferential-type language is more likely to achieve a higher mark than a long response that only provides information from the text
- look at the title of the article, how the text begins and ends, the structure of the text, any reference to statistics, quotations from experts, the use of questions and/or rhetorical questions, lists of words, instances of emotive language and examine the impact of techniques such as these in relation to how the writer develops their argument. For example, is the writer optimistic, positive, in favour of what is being discussed in the article? Or are they pessimistic, negative, against the theme of the text? If the text allows for a balance of arguments, this should be incorporated into the answer
- have opportunities to study the overall purpose examples on the Understanding Standards website as a means of discussing and reviewing the best format, formula, type of language required to answer this question successfully

Question 9: translation

Teachers and lecturers should ensure candidates:

- spend time developing translation skills, and in particular, ways of converting idiomatic expressions from Spanish into English
- can recognise and accurately translate tenses and verb forms
- develop their dictionary skills, and are aware they should consider not just the first meaning they find, but all meanings of the word or phrase to ensure they choose the one which best fits the context of their translation
- read and review their translation to ensure it makes sense and reads well in English
- make sure they do not miss out words

Question paper: Listening and Discursive Writing

Listening

Teachers and lecturers should ensure candidates:

- provide full and detailed answers
- continue to revise basic language and vocabulary
- pay particular attention to qualifiers and numbers
- access listening materials on the internet, especially short news items and podcasts from Spanish-language radio
- read the questions carefully before the recording begins to anticipate the type of language they can expect to hear
- have opportunities to practise strategies for note-taking while listening
- use Spanish as much as possible in class to help develop listening skills

Discursive Writing

Teachers and lecturers should ensure candidates:

- continue to develop the grammatical accuracy required at this level
- refer to the productive grammar grid in the appendix of the course specification to ensure that they have covered all relevant areas of grammar

- use complex and sophisticated and, if possible, idiomatic language appropriately
- address all aspects of the essay question in a relevant and balanced way
- have a focused approach, including an introduction and a conclusion, and refer to the essay stimulus
- build up banks of phrases for use in their essays, including phrases associated with linguistic signposting, linking structures and opinion phrases
- set aside some time during the exam to proofread their essay, checking spelling, verb endings and accents
- are familiar with the dictionary they will be using in the exam

Portfolio

The choice of a title is very important and should generate a discursive or evaluative approach. It may require a narrower focus to allow for deeper analysis.

Teachers and lecturers should ensure candidates:

- can use a variety of critical terminology
- use appropriate register and an objective tone
- ensure the title lends itself to meaningful analysis of the chosen text
- choose suitable secondary sources that relate to the primary source
- include a critical evaluation of the primary source
- analyse one poem at a time as opposed to moving from one poem to another
- check the factual accuracy of their work
- practise writing effective introductions that do not reveal the conclusion before they have presented their analysis
- include a wide number of quotations in Spanish to support their analysis.
Candidates should analyse these quotes and not translate them into English
- develop the quality of their bibliography to show a depth of research
- refer to at least two sources in Spanish in their bibliography
- proofread their use of English spelling and punctuation as well as accuracy in quotation from literary texts

Performance–talking

Teachers and lecturers should ensure candidates:

- choose topics that allow for mature, sophisticated and in-depth discussion
- include learned materials as a strategy to build confidence in offering information and opinions on chosen topics and are prepared to deal with unexpected questions
- read the detailed marking instructions so they are familiar with what is expected for the higher pegged marks
- focus on grammatical accuracy, particularly on the use of verb tenses (especially the preterite and the perfect), the gender of nouns, adjectival agreements, and the use of ser and estar, para and por, and the subjunctive
- develop a bank of phrases for use in their performance–talking in relation to discussion techniques in the language, which would help them deal with unexpected questions
- prepare thoroughly for the performance–talking by regularly practising discussing their chosen topics

Appendix: general commentary on grade boundaries

Our main aim when setting grade boundaries is to be fair to candidates across all subjects and levels and to maintain comparable standards across the years, even as arrangements evolve and change.

For most National Courses, we aim to set examinations and other external assessments and create marking instructions that allow:

- a competent candidate to score a minimum of 50% of the available marks (the notional grade C boundary)
- a well-prepared, very competent candidate to score at least 70% of the available marks (the notional grade A boundary)

It is very challenging to get the standard on target every year, in every subject, at every level. Therefore, we hold a grade boundary meeting for each course to bring together all the information available (statistical and qualitative) and to make final decisions on grade boundaries based on this information. Members of our Executive Management Team normally chair these meetings.

Principal assessors utilise their subject expertise to evaluate the performance of the assessment and propose suitable grade boundaries based on the full range of evidence. We can adjust the grade boundaries as a result of the discussion at these meetings. This allows the pass rate to be unaffected in circumstances where there is evidence that the question paper or other assessment has been more, or less, difficult than usual.

- The grade boundaries can be adjusted downwards if there is evidence that the question paper or other assessment has been more difficult than usual.
- The grade boundaries can be adjusted upwards if there is evidence that the question paper or other assessment has been less difficult than usual.
- Where levels of difficulty are comparable to previous years, similar grade boundaries are maintained.

Every year, we evaluate the performance of our assessments in a fair way, while ensuring standards are maintained so that our qualifications remain credible. To do this, we measure evidence of candidates' knowledge and skills against the national standard.

For full details of the approach, please refer to the Awarding and Grading for National Courses Policy.
